About

Since the 1970's, AHMA members have been actively involved in federally regulated (affordable) housing programs. The management of affordable housing is a specialized business, requiring skills and programmatic knowledge not required of other real estate management professionals.

The members of AHMA strongly believe that participants in the housing industry, private and public, must abide by high ethical standards in connections with their business affairs, and must strive to comply with all applicable program/funder requirements. As the stewards of affordable and conventional housing, no one knows better than AHMA's members how housing programs operate, what works and does not work and what should be done.

Why join AHMA?

Today, as the housing environment is ever changing and properties are being layered with additional funding sources requiring higher level reporting requirements, AHMA has adjusted its focus

AHMA now includes education in a variety of housing topics, basic property management, marketing, leasing and interpersonal skills needed to operate all properties efficiently.

AHMA's niche will still be affordable housing, but we've seen the need for educational opportunities for other housing partners as well.

The AHMA also offers networking opportunities for industry partners to meet local housing frontline and management staff.
